Western Bhutan Cultural Tours-6Nights/7Days

The best times to visit -Best Seasons to Visit Bhutan

- Spring (March to May): This is the ideal time for nature lovers. The weather is mild, skies are generally clear (though May can see some rain), and the valleys are bursting with the bloom of rhododendrons and other wildflowers. It's a great time for hiking, cultural tours, and the famous Paro Tshechu festival, which usually takes place in April.
- Autumn (September to November): This is the most popular season for general travel and trekking due to its dry, crisp air and clear skies, offering excellent panoramic views of the Himalayas. The landscapes are a picturesque golden hue from the ripening rice paddies, and major festivals like the Thimphu Tshechu and the Black-Necked Crane Festival occur during this time.

Other Seasons

- Winter (December to February): This is the least crowded and most affordable season. While higher altitudes are very cold with snowfall, lower valleys like Punakha remain milder and sunny during the day. It's an excellent time for birdwatching (including the endangered Black-Necked Cranes) and enjoying clear mountain views, but some high mountain passes may be closed.
- Summer (June to August): This is the monsoon season, bringing frequent rain, humidity, and a risk of landslides, especially in the south. Trekking is not recommended, and cloud cover often obscures mountain views. However, the scenery is incredibly lush and green, and there are fewer tourists and lower prices.
